

If you don't live under a rock somewhere in Neverland, you've probably heard of the phrase, "Dogs are a man's best friend". A twitter account called @dog_rates, also known as WeRateDogs is there to make sure that these besties are publicly celebrated. The tweets usually contain dogs' names, a cute/humorous tweet about the dogs accompanied by a rating out of 10 and the dog's picture. The numerators are usually more than 10 as shown on image 1 below and these rating are justified because "they're good dogs Brent." A greater proportion of dogs have a rating of 10 or greater with 12/10 being the Jackpot rating for most. Over 400 dogs have a rating of 12 with a very few unlucky dogs with a rating as low as 0- or was it even a dog? As you may already know, the twitter streets are full of weirdos, some of the pictures posted are pictures of kitchen appliances or tricycles that get retweets from angry dog lovers screaming, "this is an account for dogs, this is not a -bleep bleep-dog mate!". Except for a few outliers, dogs with high ratings tend to trend with more retweets and "likes".

I'm a sucker for small toy dog breeds, but it seems like most people who like tweeting about their dogs own golden retrievers. I know they are a hunter's best friend- besides their golden mane, what other special qualities do you like about golden retrievers? Dogs in their pupper stage are dominating the @dog_rates account. The pupper stage is teenager equivalent and guess which human age group likes social media as well?

And if you're looking around for a name for your new fur friend, just look at him/her and see if s/he looks like a Charlie, a Lucy, Cooper, maybe try Oliver, Lola, Penny or Tucker sit well on them. If none of them work, at least now you know those are the top 7 dog names on WeRateDogs. Until you hear from me again, have a paw-fect week.
